User Stories --- Jeffrey McTeacher

As a working student
I want to process and reflect on my emotions so that I have a clear mind when I'm working on assignments and through a shift at my job

Acceptance Criteria
Given a student trying to process their emotions
When they want to reflect on their day/week/month
Then every week show them a page which prompts them to think about the last week

reflection

As a dining hall employee I want to be less forgetful about academic work so that I can improve my grades

Acceptance Criteria
Given a forgetful student employee
When a student employee inputs a task
Then they can choose to set a due date for the task and get (email)
reminders for that task

As a full time student and full time employee
I want to get my academic/personal work done before my shift so that I can work on it when I'm not tired and not after my shift when I'm out of it

Acceptance Criteria
Given a student trying to schedule around work shifts
When a student employee inputs a task
Then they can specify if a task is High Priority (*)

Risks and Rabbit Holes

Some possible Rabbit Holes include:

- Implementing the sleep tracker graph may be new technical material that would require some time to learn how to do
- How should the tasks in the monthly log or daily log interact? Should the tasks for the days of a month be shown on the daily log page as well as the monthly log page?

Some Rabbit Holes we considered to reduce uncertainty about our vision:

- Hole: How should the user get to the various parts of the journal from the landing page?
  - Solution: Using an Index page, the user can instantly access any of the logs or tracking pages.
- Hole: What exactly are the features of the custom log that differentiates it from the monthly/daily log?
  - Solution: We expanded on the details for the functionality of the custom log, allowing users to select different layouts for the collection (paragraph, daily log-esque, retrospective, habit tracker)
